

Dear Sir,

As a flight attendant for United Airlines for the last 10 years, I believe I can speak with some knowledge about the subject of cellphone usage on airplanes. First, since it has not been proven, at this time that cellphones do not interfere with navigation, safety is my main concern. In regard to safety, I can only imagine the chaos on board during a preparation for an emergency landing, with passengers paying no attention to the crew, because everyone is too busy placing phone calls. Secondly, as a passenger, I imagine myself 33000 feet up in the air, inside a noisy aluminum tube, exhausted and trying to sleep or read, with everyone around saying, "can you hear me now?" Please do not change the current laws and maintain the present restrictions. Thank you. Julie Ann Dyer.
